

Why Did God Create an Unjust World?

"Remember the former things of old: for I am God, and there is none else; I am God, and there is none like me, Declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure."
Isaiah 46:9-10

If you assume that God created the world, you cannot be convinced that He is just by looking at what He created. Assuming that you are correct in your observation, why did He do this? Remember, all relationships require reciprocity, and reciprocity requires the exercising of the will. You cannot have a relationship with a robot or a Mannequin. He created people in order to have a relationship with them, and because He is the Creator, and they are the created ones, submission to His will is essential for the relationship to exist.

God created all people with a desire for autonomy. This desire was not the product of their sin, but the reason they sinned. If He had not created them with a desire for autonomy, they could not have chosen to have a relationship with Him. Having been given the choice, they rejected Him in their quest for autonomy.

The heart of your relationship with God centers around the question of who ultimately decides what is good and evil,¹ what is in your best interest and what is contrary to your best interest. At creation, Adam and Eve lived in utopia; it was a perfect world with no opposition, disease, or problems of any kind. The prohibition regarding eating of the fruit of the Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil was the only command God gave them. Your parents, Adam and Eve, refused to relate to their Creator on this basis and disobeyed His command. As a result, the relationship was broken.
